LONDON'S ORGAN-GRINDING EARL

Poulett Claimant Asks for an Injunction

TO OUST THE PRESENT HEIR

TITLE AND ESTATE IN DISPUTE SINCE 1899.

Story of Old Earl's Mixed Matrimonial History and the Basis of the Present Claimant's Contentions.

LONDON, Feb. 22.—Proceedings have been started in behalf of Viscount Hinton, who at one time played an organ in London streets, to eject the youthful Earl Poulett from Hinton House, pending the trial of the question of his right to the earldom. An injunction will be asked for to restrain the present occupant of the family estates from using the title of Earl Poulett.

When William Henry, Earl Poulett, died in London, Jan. 22, 1899, the succession to his title and estates came into dispute. The old earl was thrice married, and the organ-grinding claimant to his estate declares himself to be his eldest son by Miss Elizabeth Virginia Newell, a land-pilot, who was his third wife, with Rosa de Melville, daughter of Alfred Hugh de Melville, and the son of this union now enjoys the estates and property which the claimant will attempt to possess by process of law.

The alleged Earl Poulett has long lived among the London poor, supporting himself by organ-grinding. He has given some study to the matter of the housing of the London masses, with whose life and hardships he is personally familiar. The old earl never concealed his hatred for the organ-grinder, whom he characterized as an impostor. He was so opposed to the organ-grinder's life that he attempted to turn him out of the house, but the organ-grinder's life was so successful in his efforts to be recognized as the lawful heir, that he was able to retain his title, his claim thereto has been confirmed by the courts.

BELIEVED HE WAS IMMUNE.
Tattooed Man Thought Emblems Would Prevent Disease.

Harry Kyle, sailor, gold-hunter and hotel cook, delivered an illustrated lecture on tattooing to the members of the City Hospital Friday morning. His body, which is covered from neck to ankles with artistic drawings in vari-colored India ink, served as the illustration.

Until Friday Kyle believed himself immune from disease through the tattooing. "The fact that the tattooing is done on the hands of physicians did not altogether rid him of the belief.

Kyle said he was born in Covington, Ky., 41 years ago, and that for the last 22 years he has been wandering on land and sea.

"It was on the coast of India," he said, "that I met the man who gave me my first lessons in tattooing. He told me to believe that the links used were a safeguard against disease. I have never been ill before, and I have passed through epidemics of yellow fever, smallpox, cholera and the plague without contracting any of them.

On his back Kyle has a hunting scene—mounted men and women, following hounds which are pursuing rabbits. Above this is a cowboy lassoing a steer.

Over the heart he has a ship in full sail, with the emblem of faith, hope and charity floating from the masthead. Each forearm bears a red rose. The upper arms are covered with animals, including a lion, a tiger, a small animal. On one thigh is a landscape, while the other bears the picture of a woman. Below these are pictures of small animals of a dozen species, and several kinds of snakes. Kyle says he did the greater part of the work himself.

SLOWLY TURNING TO BONE

THROUGH INJURY IN A GAME OF QUOITS

ELDER Baffles Science

Though Young and Vigorous, This Man Was Seized With the Strangest of Maladies After Receiving an Accidental Blow on the Knee.

John Elder of 413 South Fourteenth street is turning to bone—the result of an injury to his right knee-cap seven years ago in a game of quoits.

He is almost completely ossified.

At the City Hospital, where he has spent the last 12 months, his case is regarded as the most interesting of its kind on record, and the progress of his strange malady, is watched closely, not only by the resident physicians and students, but by visiting doctors from all sections of the city and state.

His disease, technically known as "arthrosis deformans," is entirely different from those forms of joint and rheumatism that produce chalky formations in the joints, and because of this difference that so much interest is taken in his development.

Although he knows that every step in the progress of the disease is but an added seal to his death warrant, Elder is much interested in the case as the most enthusiastic scientific student at the hospital.

In the fact that he is making data for the medical textbooks of the future.

Although he is a subject of prolonged attacks of most excruciating pain, he takes no interest in his condition.

He likes to think and read of the activities of the world from which he is cut off, and keeps up with the news of the day.

Nothing known to the medical profession of the progress of the malady," said Supt. Nietert to the Post-Dispatch Friday. "It is a disease that is to alleviate the acute pain which results from the steady encroachment of bony growth on the bone, and the man may live on for years, though it is not probable that he will. When he dies it will probably be from some other cause."

To the student of pathology there could hardly be a more interesting subject. From a humanitarian standpoint there could hardly be a more pitiable condition.

Assistant Superintendent Amys, who has studied Elder's case from the day of his admission to the hospital, and kept a careful record of its every phase, said:

"There is not the slightest doubt that this is a true osteoarthritis. The man is usually weighed about 150 pounds. Now he weighs not more than 80 pounds, and of this probably not more than 25 pounds is flesh and blood.

Points of his legs, arms, hands and feet have been absorbed, and the cartilages have been replaced by actual bone. This renders movement impossible, notwithstanding the fact that the muscles are not involved, and the circulation of blood unimpaired. Around each of the joints the formation of bone goes steadily on, despite anything that can be done. Soon there will be nothing left of the once robust man but a dried-up skeleton. Even then he may live on for an indefinite period, for, strange to say, this peculiar malady does not kill."

"It may seem strange, but it is a fact that the disease is purely a nervous affection. Its three principal causes are shock, grief and worry. It is most common in Europe than in America, and more women suffer from it than men. Sometimes it is due to inherited nervous troubles. It is rarely found in persons more than 50 years old—usually between 25 and 30 years of age."

"Despite an old theory, it is in no way connected with the outgrowth of rheumatism in any form."

Elder is 27 years old and has lived all of his life in St. Louis. As a boy he attended Chouteau school, where he was a tobacco factory at the age of 15, and later learned the trade of a tailor.

Seven years ago he was struck on the knee-cap while playing quoits. He believes this was the cause of the trouble and the doctors say this theory is probably correct. He was lame in the right leg for six months before he went to the hospital for treatment.

"It was awfully hard to lie in one position day after day, until I got used to it," he said, "but now I do not want to move. If I lie perfectly still I do not suffer much, and I can still use my right hand and move my head about. I know it will not be long, however, and I know I will go to bed and I might as well get ready to leave there as to leave here."

PEKIN, Ill., Feb. 22.—Despite the ruling of the court against the introduction of testimony bearing on the peculiar rites of the Amish church, the case of Samuel Moser, charged with the murder of his wife and children, has managed to place before the jury many facts to show that the defendant's crime was in his own belief at least due to his ostracism by the members of his religious faith.

This was very skillfully done by Moser's lawyer, Mr. Green.

Edward W. Palmer, the police officer at Salt Lake City, testified to finding Moser in the Amish church, where he was questioned by the officer he pointed to a number of letters on a table and asked that they be read. The policemen tore them open and for the first time found the prisoner was Moser. He could scarcely believe the letters addressed to different parties all detailed the crime, and stated that Moser was a man of great intelligence and all his trouble. Mr. Palmer identified these letters and they were offered in evidence.

Pressed aside by a newspaper, the attorney for the defense, wanted for they paved the way for the introduction of evidence that Moser was a man of great intelligence and all his trouble. Mr. Palmer identified these letters and they were offered in evidence.

DEATH DUE TO A LEAD PENCIL.
Brooklyn Man Stuck Lead Into His Finger While Brushing His Clothing.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—Wm. N. K. Huntz, of Brooklyn Manor, L. I., may lose his arm if not his life, as the result of a peculiar accident.

Huntz was brushing off his clothing with a whisk broom recently, when the point of a lead pencil penetrated his forefinger.

A few days ago, although it had healed, the finger began to itch and become stiff. Huntz, who is a painter, who said the graphite from the pencil had poisoned his blood, and the plague without contracting any of them.

On his back Kyle has a hunting scene—mounted men and women, following hounds which are pursuing rabbits. Above this is a cowboy lassoing a steer.

ST. Engineer Gallagher and Fireman Hall, also of the fast train, only saved their lives by jumping clear of the wreck. The engine was completely buried under the wreckage, but was protected by wheels of a car which was taken to the office of J. E. Kalme & Co. Among those present were: Kalme & Co., M. D. Lewis, J. H. Maguire, R. V. Noonan, Joseph C. Darat, Harry L. Haydon, Adam Block, James M. Carpenter, Robert Rutledge and J. H. Terry.

SAW LEE LEAVES HOSPITAL.
Hop Alley Resident Returns to His Pipe.

Sam Lee of Hop Alley was dismissed from the observation ward of the City Hospital Friday morning, having fully recovered from the opium-smoking spree in which he indulged last Monday in celebration of the Chinese New Year.

Sam was invited to leave the hospital Thursday, but declined. When Gary Kelly tried to coerce him, Sam refused to dress, declaring it was "too heavy much cold."

After another night in the cell, Sam changed his mind and asked for his clothes. "Bleve me, bleve bleter. Give smoke pipe and a bottle of beer," he said with a smile.

"Why didn't you say you could talk sense?" Kelly asked. "Here you were making a monkey of me for four days, pretending you couldn't understand. Now you get out."

The bundle of clothing that was taken to Sam from the recreation room contained three suits of heavy underwear, two pairs of trousers, three coats, two pairs of socks, and a pair of shoes.

Sam required 30 minutes for dressing. Then Kelly led the shivering laundryman to his single gate and bade him a strenuous farewell.

Miss Gardner was unconscious from the blow on her head.
